

THE MACINTOSH (1984)

Imagine using a computer by typing complicated commands like a secret code, every single time.

In 1984, Apple launched the Macintosh, a small computer that introduced something brand new: the mouse. Instead of typing commands, users could now click on icons and move windows around.

It felt like magic! The Macintosh made computers friendly and fun to use. That little Mac with the smiling face opened the door to a world of creativity.
